

indulgent

Regardless of the increasing pressure on designers to create sustainably and consumers to buy consciously, there are and probably always will be products which encourage indulgence. These objects might be difficult to use, overpriced, have no apparent need and are unlikely to have a sustained appeal. Examples could include, the 'Juicy Salif' lemon squeezer by Phillippe Starck [1990] and a Swarovski crystal encrusted mobile phone case [2008]. {March 2012}
